

Conversation Pieces started as a hobby for Audrey Ng in 2002. Then, she had just relocated from Singapore to Los Angeles. Clueless in a new land, she found young people online who shared her passion for fashion and design, who were interested to showcase their works beyond the United States.

In her bedroom, on a laptop, Audrey built a website to host the works of these designers. Word of mouth within the indie industry soon sent other design students from fashion schools as far as Spain, the UK, Australia and Greece to Conversation Pieces, and soon a global design community formed. Audrey had known nothing about the fashion business. All she wanted to do was create a venue for young indie designers to be able to sell their creations.

With increasing demand and enthusiasm from customers, it was clear Conversation Pieces had become more than a hobby, but a credible business.

Years later, Conversation Pieces now takes its designer community around the world on a series of fashion show-and-sample events. The events are huge, fast paced and bumped up with runway fashion shows, art exhibitions, music, cocktails, gift bags and more.

Audrey continues to seek out budding yet-to-be known designers, and her customers know that at Conversation Pieces, they can get unique, one of a kind, limited quantity creations, while at the same time supporting indie fashion around the world.
